To Whom It May Concern:

My office represents Indie Research, LLC ("Indie"), an investment research firm headquartered at 254 Witherspoon Street, Princeton, New Jersey. Indie has discovered a possible data security breach of network servers located in Massachusetts which may have compromised the personal information of customers who are residents of New Hampshire. We are taking steps to determine the extent of the security breach and the scope of any compromised personal information.

Very truly yours,

Dear Next Inning Technology Report Subscriber,

NextInning.com has recently learned that certain electronically-stored information has been accessed by unapproved third-parties. Our investigation to-date reveals that as a result, certain users' names, credit card information, email addresses, billing addresses, and/or login information were likely compromised. Our investigation also indicates that this situation arose between April 3 and April 7, 2012, and we became aware of it on April 11, 2012.

You are receiving this letter because our investigation reveals that some of your personal information was improperly accessed.

The breach appears to have been limited to information that was on file with NextInning.com as of November 2004. At this time, we do not believe that more recent data were compromised.

We have reported this incident to a number of federal and state law-enforcement authorities. We have also contacted our merchant bank processor, each of the major credit card companies, and the Experian, Equifax, and TransUnion credit bureaus.

We encourage you to continue to protect your privacy by contacting your credit card companies, updating passwords where appropriate, and reviewing account statements and your credit reports (which are available for free from a number of providers). At the bottom of this letter you will find contact information for the major credit reporting agencies and the Federal Trade Commission. You can obtain information from these sources about credit fraud alerts and security freezes.

The security of your personal information has been and will always be a top priority for us. We are in the process of reviewing and updating our security measures. We take your privacy very seriously and are very sorry for any problems or inconvenience this incident may cause. Our customer service team is available to answer additional questions at: 1-888-278-5515 or help@nextinning.com.

Sincerely,
